JANET L. STONER

Since women's intercollegiate sports had not come to FSU when Ms. Stoner was a student, she was an active member of the Tarpon Club (the women's swimming club) and F-Club. She received her BS in physical education and two years after receiving her master's degree in mathematics in Scotland in 1972, Ms. Stoner joined Texaco as senior petroleum engineer. She rose quickly through the ranks, serving as director of technical service, general manager of productions, and vice president of exploration and production in Texaco's Latin America/West Africa division. In 1997, she moved to New York and assumed her current position as vice president of Texaco, Inc., overseeing the company's worldwide human resources policies and programs. Ms. Stoner was recently appointed to Texaco's Executive Council, which is composed of six senior managers.

DR. CHARLOTTE WEST

Dr. West received two BS degrees, from FSU in 1954, in physical education and mathematics. She received her master's from UNC at Greensboro and her doctorate degree in physical education from University of Wisconsin. Had women's intercollegiate sports been available, Dr. West no doubt would have been a four letter athlete during her college years. She has experienced athletics as an athlete, a coach, official in four sports, administrator, and a leader in athletic professional associations. She retired as associate athletic director from Southern Illinois University. Dr. West has served on numerous NCAA committees including five years on NCAA Council and a contributing member of the NCAA Gender Equity Task Force. The first woman to be a member of the National Association of Collegiate Directors of Athletics, she later served on the Executive Committee. Throughout her career, she has worked to increase opportunities for women in sports.
