Just as important as it is to win matches as Florida State, head coach Todd Kress likes to focus intently on breeding the complete well-rounded player. The Seminoles not only compete for one of the top program's in the nation, but they continue to remain a fixture in the community each season. The volleyball squad logged the second most number of community service hours by any FSU team in the 2004-05 school year. Furthermore, junior Sarah Griffin recorded more community service hours than any other individual student-athlete at Florida State! Each season the entire team gives free fundamental clinics to youth at some point during the season. The players are always available for the children after matches whether it's to sign autographs or answer questions. Appearances, speaking engagements, and volunteering are apart of everyday life for a Seminole!
