Tribe Tonight

by Mark Carlson, Florida State Sports Information Director

Bobby Bowden became enthused last Sunday when a member of the state press corps that covers the Seminoles questioned the Tribe mentor about the upcoming game with Miami.

"Oh my," said Bowden with his Alabama twang, "that should be a goooooooooooooo one. It always means a little more when you have Florida boys going against Florida boys."

What Bowden forgot was that tonight's matchup of unbeatens—2-0 Florida State vs. 1-0 Miami—will match not just Florida boys, but Tallahassee lads.

Yes, it's a rarity, but when rookie Miami head coach Howard Schnellenberger trots his club onto the field it will include two players who list Tallahassee as their hometown. One—starting tailback Chris Hobbs—played for Godby High School and was a member of its 1976 state championship team.

Hobbs will be receiving his instructions on the field from Mike Rodrigue, who played his high school football at Choctawatchee High School. Mike has since moved to Tallahassee with his parents, who operate a motel here.

The Rodrigue name should be familiar to Seminole fans. His father was a Seminole quarterback and Mike's brother Mark is presently a member of the Seminole varsity.

With Rodrigue guiding the Hurricane attack it means both sides will be engineered by signal callers with a Tallahassee background. Florida State, naturally, has its tandem of Wally Woodham and Jimmy Jordan who direct the Garnet and Gold offensive machine.

And, if early games this season are any indication it would appear the game should be a fan's delight.

Florida State in its victories over Southern Mississippi (17-14) and Arizona State (31-3) has continued its tradition of throwing the football. The Seminoles averaged better than 33 passes per contest in their first two games with an average of 16 completions and slightly better than 100 yards through the air per contest.

Under Schnellenberger for the first time last Saturday Miami really opened up its attack. Schnellenberger had Rodrigue throwing on practically every other down. In fact, the Hurricanes put the ball in the air on 32 of their 67 offensive plays.

"That doesn't surprise me," said Bowden. "In Howard Schnellenberger, Miami hired one of the finest offensive coaches in all football. The success of the Miami Dolphins in recent years was because they had Schnellenberger there as the offensive coordinator. Where offense is concerned Howard is a football genius."

Thus, the Seminole defense which ranks fourth in the country for total defense, this week will receive a very stern test. It will be the biggest test the defenders have had this season.

A Third Lineman, Or Another Receiver?

AT FLORIDA STATE THE TIGHT END MUST BE BOTH

by Elgin White, FSU SPORTS INFORMATION

To the uninitiated football fan, and there are still a few of those around these days, a tight end is the inebriated dude on the aisle seat.

But to most of us knowledgeable gridiron devotees, the tight end is the fellow who goes out and catches a pass, right?

Well, yes, but that isn't all there is to it.

Kent Schoolfield, who coaches the tight ends and wide receivers for the Florida State's Seminoles, tried to put it all in perspective, to give an overview of the many and varied duties of a tight end.

"Actually," Schoolfield said, "a tight end is a cross between an offensive lineman and a wide receiver. He has to be big enough to be a lineman, but with the added ability to be able to run and catch the football. And the height and weight of our tight ends vary as to the offense we're using."

Schoolfield explained that two of the Seminole tight ends, Sam Childers and Grady King, are not really physical enough to block a Willie Jones, for example, but with their running and catching ability, they fit in with the Seminoles' style of offense.

Then there are those who don't know or cannot visualize the difference between a tight end and a split end. Schoolfield expounds again: "The difference between the two is almost self explanatory. The tight ends line up close to the tackles on offense, while the split end is just that . . . he's split out to the side. In essence the split end is another wide receiver, and as such usually is not as big as a tight end."

What might be the difference, talent-wise, that makes a fellow a tight end rather than a defensive end? "Mostly running and catching ability," Schoolfield said. "Now there are some defensive ends who would make great tight ends. Willie Jones was one, for example. And we have a freshman, Zeke Mowatt, who is playing defensive end this year who may well develop into a tight end next year, depending upon our needs at both positions.

"Mowatt has all the tools. He is tall and rangy, has quick moves, and can catch the ball with the best of them. If we have enough strength at defensive end next year, there is a good chance Zeke will be a tight end. Once during fall drills Zeke told me he could catch the ball as well as any of the others. I told him to show me. He did."

Schoolfield said there are many players on the Florida State team who could switch over from defense to offense and do a great job. "Bobby Butler could play wide receiver with no trouble at all," Schoolfield said. "He was a quarterback in high school and there are a lot of high school quarterbacks who make excellent college wide receivers. But on the other hand, if the need is there, these players also can switch to defense, especially in the backfield, and they make the best safeties and corner backs."

Schoolfield also said there was a great potential for Dennis McKinnon to be a wide receiver, as he was in high school last year in Miami, but "if we can recruit a couple more like Hardis Johnson, another freshman, then McKinnon will play defensive back. Again, all according to our needs."

Schoolfield said the making of a tight end depends in the main on his blocking ability. If he is a great blocker, he will make a good offensive lineman, but if he is a great blocker and can catch and run as well, then he goes to the tight end spot.

"You hear about the backs and wide receivers and centers and defensive backs being the skill positions," Schoolfield said, "but tight end is just as much a skill position as those are, mainly because of the need to have blocking as well as pass catching ability."

Another thing many of the uninitiated don't quite understand about the importance of tight ends is on short yardage plays, especially offensive maneuvers near the goal line. That's when you'll see many coaches insert two tight ends into the lineup at the same time. Reason—plain and simple—blocking. "You can't bring in a little old 170 pound wide receiver on a goal line play and expect him to block a 267-pound defensive end," Schoolfield said. "That's when the tight ends are again utilized, because they have the speed as well as size to block those big defensive ends on short yardage plays."

Schoolfield was reluctant to pick out the qualities one of his tight ends might have over another. "They are all three good athletes," he said. "I would guess that Bill Keck is the better blocker of the three. Grady King is probably the better catcher, and Sam Childers has the best speed. But, when you come right down to it, they all three can do all those things."

Schoolfield felt that young Mowatt has the best potential to be a superstar tight end for the Seminoles if he plays that position. "Zeke can do it all, and I would say he would have an excellent opportunity to be the best all-around tight end we have had here at Florida State since Ed Beckman." Beckman is now playing that same position for the Kansas City Chiefs.

There are probably two things that dictate when a player is going to get a shot at tight end for Florida State. One is his over-all size, speed and hands, and the other is how quickly he can adapt to the Seminole style of offense. "Our tight ends must have a good blocking technique to handle our relatively simple blocking schemes," Schoolfield said.

So there you have it. Playing tight end is not just inserting some big guy in the game who carries an 80's number on his back and tell him in the huddle to go out for a pass. He may do that, or he may block a defensive end, a linebacker, or a corner back, depending upon the play being used.

But if he has to go out for a pass, you can bet he has the ability to run his pattern, pick out the seam in the zone defense, cut back over the middle, or go straight down the sidelines. Whatever his assignment, a talented tight end can do them all.

Actually, there is little to choose between FSU's three tight ends on this year's squad. Grady King of Satellite Beach is the senior on the squad, but has been a part-time starter the past two seasons because of injuries. Last season he tied for third on the team in total receptions with 23 for 212 yards and four TD's. The first touchdown reception for King came in the '77 Tangerine Bowl victory over Texas Tech.

Keck is the junior. He hails from Newark, Ohio, and shared starting time last year with King and Childers. As mentioned earlier, he is regarded the better blocker of the three, but still managed to grab 11 passes for 128 yards last season. He sustained a knee injury last fall and again in spring drills, and prior to the start of fall drills was very questionable. He has responded to treatment, however, and barring further injury, should have his best year yet.

Sam Childers is a Tallahassee Leon product, much in the same mold as Jimmy Jordan, Wally Woodham and Kurt Unglaub. He is well coached. Childers is one of eight freshmen to win a letter in 1978, and saw starting duty late in the season. He caught six passes for 45 yards, though he is still looking for his first varsity TD. Childers received a slight leg injury in fall drills that has slowed him somewhat, but he should be in top form by mid-season. Of the three tight ends now toiling for the Seminoles, Childers is considered probably the best all around player.

So there you have it . . . skill, speed, size and pass catching ability to go along with good blocking talent. That's all it takes to be a tight end at Florida State and this year, the Seminole trio on the job seem to have all the credentials.

WELCOME!

Dear Seminole Fans:

Florida State University's thrust for the next several years will be upon increased emphasis toward quality improvement in all of its academic programs. Ever since 1947 when Florida State became coeducational, the University has been hard pressed just to keep up with the rapid growth it experienced. Now, with enrollments leveling off, our faculty and staff are looking forward to stressing quality improvement even more.

The same can now be said for the Florida State Seminole football team. Its growth has been just as rapid, starting from scratch in 1947. During the past two seasons, our Seminoles have had fantastic won-lost records, including one post-season bowl game.

Those of us at Florida State won't be completely satisfied until we make the Top 10 in sports and academics. And when we get into that elite group, we will continue to strive to go even higher, both in the classrooms and on the football field.

I want to take this opportunity to say "thanks" to you, the loyal fans who have supported our Seminoles through the years. Without you, the success we have achieved would not have been possible. With your expected continued support, we have a good shot at reaching that Top 10 position.

On behalf of the students, faculty and staff of Florida State University, "welcome" to our campus. We hope you will come back soon and often. You will always be welcome.

Sincerely,

Bernard F. Sliger

BOWDEN!

How does one describe Florida State head football coach Bobby Bowden?

Bobby Bowden may be one of the original down-home, good old boys, and to hear him tell it he's been a Seminole all his life. He wears a garnet and gold stripe shirt, hits golf balls with an official FSU driver and, if properly motivated, might tell you he bleeds garnet and gold.

He truly enjoys being the head football coach at Florida State University.

And, why shouldn't he?

After all, in three seasons, the Seminoles have compiled a 23-11 record under the guidance of Bowden, who currently ranks 15th on the active list of college coaches in winning percentage (.691).

But, for Bowden it's more than just winning. Being a head football coach at a major university allows him to be out and around, meeting the people. During the month of May, for instance, he normally speaks to a minimum of 25 Seminole Booster Clubs around the state.

Why?

There are two obvious answers: recruiting and fund raising.

But there's more to this man who has turned the fortunes of the Florida

State football program from ashes to a rising star on the national scene. He is more than just a football coach. He is also a deeply religious individual, who when he's not on the road recruiting and raising funds, can often be found at a church podium in Tallahassee or one of the surrounding communities on Sunday mornings.

"I enjoy meeting and talking with people," Bowden explains. "I'm not a preacher. I'm not qualified to preach. I do like to share my experiences with God, though, especially with young people."

"I want to add something to their lives . . . to make them aware of what's going on around them."

"Kids enjoy listening to coaches speak. I know I did when I was growing up. Kind of looked up to them, you know what I mean?"

Bowden certainly has the football buffs of the southeastern United States attention after what has happened in three seasons at Florida State.

Consider these facts . . .

(1) After going 4-29 in three seasons B.B. (Before Bowden), the Seminoles have now compiled a 23-11 mark with him captaining the ship;

(2) The 1977 Seminoles won 10 games enroute to a 10-2 record. Those 10 victories represent the most ever registered by any major (Division I-A) college team now playing football in Florida;

(3) Florida State's '77 Seminoles finished the season ranked 11th and 14th in the individual wire service polls;

(4) Bowden took the Seminoles '77 to their first bowl appearance since the 1971 Fiesta Bowl;

(5) Despite the fact that there were just five seniors on the 1978 squad, it survived a mid-season slump, to manage an 8-3 record. That ledger was not good enough for national ranking or a bowl appearance at the conclusion of the season but it provided momentum for 1979;

(6) Early in the 1978 campaign, FSU managed to rank ninth and 10th in the wire service polls after three consecutive victories. Those were the highest rankings EVER for a Seminole football squad.

So . . . Seminole fans look forward to 1979. It should be an especially pleasing campaign for Bowden, a Birmingham, Ala., native, because unless the Garnet and Gold suffers a complete collapse Bowden will notch his 100th coaching victory at the major college level.

Bowden begins 1979 just four wins shy of the 100 victory plateau. His overall report card is 96-43 and includes marks of 31-6 at Samford and 42-26 at West Virginia before joining the Seminole camp.

Bowden began at Florida State with a 5-6 record. But, since that time everything has been on the upward trend. And, despite the disappointment of not receiving a bowl berth or finishing in the prestigious Top 20 Seminole fans remain excited.

That is because of the pass happy offense Bowden has installed since taking over. Last year the Seminoles displayed the 11th best offense (411.1 yards per game) in the country and the third best passing attack (249.9). And, the team averaged 28.4 points a game. The point average included 38 point efforts in three of the final four games.

What is the reason for the Bowden coaching success?

Enthusiasm and discipline are key words which exemplify Bowden's overall attitude, both on and off the field.

"I believe in discipline and enthusiasm in everything you do in life," Bowden says, "and you coach what you believe. If we can be enthusiastic in the little things we do, it will carry over to a winning season."

"But don't get me wrong about discipline. I believe in letting the players know who is boss, and I believe in some sacrifice and devotion. But discipline can only go so far."

"If short hair and perfect manners won football games, the Army-Navy game would be played every year for the national championship."

Bowden's coaching philosophy is quite simple.

"I believe in blocking and tackling," he says. "Everything else in this game is secondary; blocking and tackling will cause wins."

Winning means a lot to Bowden, an avid golfer, who since moving to Tallahassee has improved his game steadily.

"I don't believe in playing without a scorecard," says Bowden. "I don't feel there is any accomplishment with a tie. I think if one of my teams was playing Notre Dame for the national title and I had the choice of winning or losing or going for the tie, I would go for the win."

National championship was not a term mentioned with a great deal of frequency at Florida State until the last two years. Bowden explains it cautiously.

"A national championship is the ultimate in coaching, but I must be realistic," says Bowden. "Every year we set new goals with our team. In 1977 our first objective was landing a spot in the Top 20. Then we wanted a bowl bid."

"Last year we fell short of our goal—gaining a spot in the final Top 10 and going to our second consecutive bowl game. But, that may not have been all that bad. Our players know that to achieve those goals they must do more than step on the field. They realize Florida State needs a consistent winning record to be a legiti-mate contender each year for national honors."

Born on November 8, 1929, Bowden attended Woodlawn High School in Birmingham, Ala., and was a Little All-American quarterback at Samford University. He holds a bachelor's degree from Samford and master's from Peabody College. He married his childhood sweetheart, the former Julia Ann Estock, and they have six children.

Mrs. Bowden is active in the Tallahassee community and recently helped establish the Extra Point Club, a group of women working towards the betterment of FSU football. Steve is studying for the ministry in Louisville, Robyn teaches at Fairmont State College, Tommy is a graduate assistant on the FSU staff, Terry manages the Coble Terrace residence hall which houses many of the Seminole football players, Jeff is a walkon wide receiver at Florida State and Ginger is a freshman at FSU.

THE DRAW KEEPS THE DEFENSE HONEST

by Bill Lyon, Philadelphia INQUIRER

There's only one thing wrong with the title of this article," the coach was saying. "You didn't finish it."

The title, of course, is "The Draw Keeps the Defense Honest." The coach wanted an amendment to it. This: "... But Only If You Throw."

What he was contending—and his point was supported by five other successful college football coaches around the country—is that the draw is effective only if you are in a passing situation, or if you have a reputation as a passing team. Otherwise, calling the draw is like Jimmy Carter ordering extra teeth, or one of those Mideastern oil sheikdoms stocking up on economy cars.

"When you're playing a team that is primarily a running team, the draw is the first thing you look for on third-and-long," the coach explained. "The draw is like any other play in that it works only at the right time, at the right place, and against the right defense. That last part is the most important. The draw works best when it's a definite passing down, but again, only if you're a team that throws. It's most effective fective in an obvious passing situation.

"The defense has to believe you're going to pass. Which means you have to encourage them. It's the old step-into-my-parlor routine with the spider and the fly. You lure 'em in and then you spring the trap."

A team that works the draw best is one recruited from drama class. Theatrics are needed by all 11 players on offense.

"Better believe it," the coach agreed. "You have to do a great selling job. You have to convince the defense you're going to throw 'cause you want them with their ears back, rearing on their hind legs and really coming at you."

"The whole philosophy behind the draw is to spread out the defense, create gaps, widen lanes. What you're trying to achieve is a one-on-one situation. And if you have the best athletes, then your one-on-one is gonna win."

So it all begins with the classic con—I'll make you believe I'm going to do something when, in fact, I intend to do just the opposite. In the case of the draw, show pass even though you're going to run.

"It starts with your offensive line," the coach said. "Your blockers set up like it's a pass. They retreat, a step at a time."

"They have to steer the rushers whatever way they want to go, make 'em believe they're overpowering the blockers. You keep suckering them in. And your receivers, they've got to run their patterns with convictions, make that secondary go after them, make them worried about getting burned by a pass."

"And your quarterback, he's really got to fake it. He's the one who makes the draw go because the defense is always taught that the longer the QB has the ball then the deeper the linebackers and the defensive backs should drop. That's what I meant by spreading out the defense."

Even the most casual fan knows the draw, of course. The quarterback, if he is convincing, backpedals furiously, tries to work up a look of terror and panic as though he is about to be sacked. And then, at the proper moment, he slips the ball into the waiting back's belly. The momentum of the defense's pass rush has, by now, carried it beyond the point of that exchange.

"If things have gone right," the coach said, "you've split the front group, and you've got the others 30 or 40 yards downfield. If your man picks up a block, he can go all the way."

But there is another key to the draw. Patience.

"Right," the coach said. "Patience in executing it. Most teams run the draw too fast, and they don't finish it off. The

THE DRAW

ABOUT THE AUTHOR—Bill Lyon has been a sport columnist for The Philadelphia Inquirer since 1973, covering football on a regular basis and reporting on such other major events as the Super Bowl, World Series, Masters, U.S. Open, Stanley Cup playoffs, heavyweight fights and even the Evel Knievel Snake River Canyon jump. back who's carrying the ball has to delay, even after he's taken the handoff. Otherwise, the defense has a chance to recover. That's why we run what we call a 'back door draw.' The quarterback actually passes by the back, then hands the ball forward. That'll make the back delay. He has to stay put. I'd say that's the biggest problem with the way most teams run the draw. The back gets itchy feet. He sees a hole developing and he can't wait to get to it. If he'd just be patient, that hole will get wider and wider.

"And the quarterback has to finish it off. After he's handed off, he's got to go on retreating and set up like he's going to throw. That'll keep the pass rushers coming, and they'll run themselves right out of the play. After all, that's why they call it the draw; the idea is to d-r-a-w everyone in. The quarterback is the cheese. If he's convincing, then you can snap the trap right on their neck."

This particular coach believes that the draw actually should be considered a passing play. Others share that belief.

"Any yardage you make on the draw," said another coach, "should be added to your passing yardage. Just like screens and flares. And a quarterback sack, that yardage loss should come off the passing total, not the running."

It may seem a minor statistical point but it underscores the importance of the draw as a complement to the passing game.

One misconception is that the draw is effective against a blitz. In fact, it works best in situations when most teams ordinarily throw. Example: with time running out and your team behind.

"Most teams go for the bomb or try to work the sidelines with passes," notes another coach whose team routinely throws 30 to 35 times a game. "But in that situation, against a prevent defense, the draw is perfect. First off, you've already got the defense spread out. They've done half the job for you. They're laying back, and they're really vulnerable to the draw because they, and everybody in the stadium, is expecting you to put it up for grabs. We've run the draw in catch-up situations and scored 70-yard touchdowns off it."

There are, obviously, refinements off the original.

There are sprint and roll draws and quarterback draws and quick draws. But they are hybrids and remain primarily running plays.

"But the regular draw," another coach said, "is a play all by itself. It's calculated, it's a big play move, a home run kind of offense. One guy misses a tackle and the draw can take you all the way. And sometimes we'll use it just for a change of pace. Let's say we're not completing any passes and we're not getting anything by running, we'll call the draw just for variety, just to disrupt the other guy's tempo."

Two variations of the draw: Top: The quarterback fades back faking a pass play and abruptly hands off to the strong side back who is cutting over the weak side of the line. Bottom: The quarterback drops back quickly for a short distance faking a deep drop-back, then cuts back over center, reading the defensive center for direction.

Teams which use the draw have learned they need options off it. So they run a reverse off the draw. Or they pass off the draw. It seems logical. If you're going to depend heavily on one play, you need variations off it. After all, everyone knows how modern and complicated the game has become. Why, the draw itself is a new-fangled invention, isn't it?

"I have a book in my office," a coach said, "written by Amos Alonzo Stagg, and it's got a draw play diagrammed in it. You know when the book was published? In 1893."

WE ARE DRIVEN

It was 1923, and Tad Jones, the fabled coach, stood before his men in the locker room. "Gentlemen," he said, "you are about to play football for Yale against Harvard. Never in your lives will you ever do anything so important."

That's the essence of the big game. We chuckle at Jones' emphasis—but in more reflective moments we realize that for most young men his words are startlingly prophetic. His statement is the core of the big game, and you can substitute any of scores of names for Yale and Harvard.

Great games may be traditional matches, games that always are sold out a year ahead of time. Or circumstances may heat white a game between teams that aren't old rivals. A memorable example of the latter occurred in 1921.

Centre College of Danville, Ky., a school with a student body of 295, wrangled a couple of dates with mighty Harvard. The Praying Colonels were awed by Harvard's big stadium and were smashed 34-13 in 1920.

But Centre's triple threat, Bo McMillin, snarled: "We'll be back here next year to take you."

It happened. Centre returned, and McMillin scored the game's only touchdown, weaving through the Harvard team for 35 yards. So caught up in the scene were Crimson fans that they carried McMillin off the field.

Big games spawn memorable stories, and one of football's most famous involves the dying George Gipp.

posed to have said to his coach, Knute Rockne.

Years later, in 1928, a great Army team was leading the Irish at halftime—and there was no bigger game at the time than Notre Dame-Army. Rockne secured his place in college football legend with a stirring halftime talk asking his troops to win that one for the Gipper.

Late in the game, Jack Chevigny crossed the goal line for the winning touchdown in a 12-6 upset, crying: "This one's for the Gipper!"

Memories of a historic game—one that his team lost—helped Gerald Ford years later in another rugged field, that of politics.

Ford played linebacker and center on the 1934 Michigan team that won just one game. In fact, he was voted its most valuable player.

The Wolverines were facing Minnesota, the eventual national champion, and the battle cry in Minneapolis, the game site, was "Mangle Michigan." A record crowd of 60,000 turned out to see it happen.

Minnesota wore down Michigan with raw power in the second half and won 34-0, but that afternoon remained special to Ford, even after he became President.

"During 25 years in the rough-and-tumble world of politics, I often thought of the experiences before, during and after that game in 1934," Ford said. "Remembering them has helped me many times to face a tough situation, take action, and make every effort possible despite adverse odds. I remember how Michigan students and people in Ann Arbor met us at the train station that Sunday. There was a rousing parade, and this was a meaningful tribute to the fight the Wolverines had put up against Minnesota."

A man who would become President figured in another historic game, though in quite a different way.

Stanford-California is one of football's tradition-laden matches. California had been playing for years, but Stanford fielded its first football team in 1892. A match between the two Bay Area schools was a natural.

It was such a natural, in fact, that a crowd estimated at 20,000 showed up, though tickets had been printed for only 10,000.

Little paper money was in circulation in those days, and the mountain of change caused a crisis. Herbert Hoover, student manager of the Stanford team, quickly rounded up wash boilers and dish pans to hold the gold and silver spectators paid for their tickets.

Incidentally, there was another problem in the initiation of this great rivalry. When the referee called the captains to the center of the field for the coin toss, it was discovered no one had brought a football. The game was delayed for more than an hour while a storekeeper who happened to be in the crowd rode his horse into town to get a ball.

For Huey Long, the late governor of Louisiana, every game that LSU played was a big game. He meddled in the school's football affairs, and in 1934 he demonstrated the depths of his obsession.

LSU was scheduled to play Southern Methodist under Tiger Stadium's lights, but the Barnum & Bailey Circus, on its annual tour of the nation, planned a show in direct conflict with the game.

The Kingfish, a U.S. senator at that time, feared the circus would cut the crowd, and LSU had given SMU a big cash guarantee.

Long decided the circus just wouldn't play, and he found a relatively obscure state law to back his hand.

Long called in a representative of the circus and informed him that Louisiana had a cattle dip law that applied to any animal crossing the state line.

"Did you ever dip a lion?" Long asked the startled man. The circus performance was called off.

Big games. They're the brightest threads in the fabric of college football.

Huey Long was a fan of LSU football.

THE PSYCHOLOGY OF A FIELD GOAL KICKER

by Marino Parascenzo, Pittsburgh POST GAZETTE

Everything was going well for the coach. Nature had blessed him with a dash of adversity for the routine practice session. It was therefore an inspiring Eastern autumn afternoon—the cold drizzle had ended, but it left a chill air behind, and the artificial turf was well soaked.

His players were sprawled on the cold, wet surface, wrenching themselves through the flexibility drills, and he strolled among them nodding with satisfaction. Until he came to the back row.

The field goal kicker had discovered a large, dry piece of plywood, and he was doing his exercises on it, in relative comfort. The coach snickered. Then he caught himself and put on his practice face.

"What do you think you're doing?" he demanded, glaring down, hands hard on hips.

The kicker stopped and looked up, grinning sheepishly. "Well, uh, my drills," he said.

"Do them over there," the coach said, pointing to a vacant puddle, "so's you can get nice and wet just like everybody else."

Any player worth his sweat would have sneaked to the plywood, of course, but this player happened to be the kicker. Fate seems to bring kickers and awkward moments together. Still, the incident serves to illustrate an idea held dear by many—kickers are different, and not really part of the team.

One sideline philosopher offered a theory. "Kickers are the way they are," he said, "because they were left alone too much as small children."

A West Coast kicker, one of this season's top returnees, may never have heard that assessment, but he touched its fringes with one of his own.

"If we don't seem like part of the team," he said, "it's because we're alone so much with our own practice."

The kicker suffers even greater solitude during the game. Facing only occasional action, and at brittle times, he is left on the sidelines with festering thoughts of doom to come. His is the crisis art. There are 22 men assembled for a field goal try, but the thousands of eyes are on only one man. The screw tightens. It is a good time to break and run for the exit. But the kicker just kicks and awaits the thunder—cheers or jeers.

"Kicking is a mental thing, not a physical thing," said a Southern booter. That seems to be the consensus of kickers.

And perhaps that is what sets the kicker apart and tends to distort the view of him. There is a belief—and it can only be described as universal—that the kicker's mind is in the trees if not among the stars; that he wanders around muttering secret rhythms or praying to obscure deities; that he breathes the rarefied air of discus throwers and metaphysical philosophers.

This is not altogether true. On the other hand, it is not altogether false.

Some kickers admit to striving for mind control, to taking quiet moments before a game for cleansing relaxation through something approaching transcendental meditation—things practically taboo in the manly art, if they are thought of at all. Kickers also "think kicking" in a way that runners cannot "think running."

A kicker depends as much on mental concentration as on actual physical skills.

"When I hit a good kick," said a Northwest kicker, "I practice it in my mind and I try to repeat that same kick over and over."

Thus occupied with the pursuit of the perfect kick, a kicker can develop a blank look on his face, giving rise to suspicions in those around him. But the exercise is not all that odd. Pro golfers practice the perfect shot in their mind. They call it "visualization." It is recommended by many, Jack Nicklaus among them.

"There's no doubt about it, kickers are different," said a Southeastern booter. "You have to be, in order to spend the long hours alone." He used to kick for hours, between two trees at home, until it got too dark to see.

Other football players get strong nicknames, like "Bam" or "Hawk," calling up visions of speed and power and danger. It's different with kickers. Theirs fall into the category of "Bird" and "Blade," both originating because of the kicker's slim build.

Any man who can endure these nicknames can look at a 40-yarder without flinching. It's all in how one handles the pressure. Many kickers around the country agree that the kicker has to drop a curtain somewhere in his mind.

"You have to blank out the pressure," said a top returnee this season.

And just when that point is conceded, along comes a dissenting voice.

"I put the pressure on," said a South-eastern booter. "When I was a freshman, I would blank it out, and I would overcompensate and not concentrate enough. So last year I decided to concentrate more. I would tell myself every time—I've got to make this one."

The reverse English worked for that kicker, but not for a Southwestern booter, who went into a game last year with nine straight field goals and needed just two more to tie the NCAA record. "I guess I got to thinking about that record," he said. "I blew the next kick."

Some kickers develop a concentration approaching tunnel vision. A Northwesterner, for example, beat an opponent last year with a remarkable field goal in the dying seconds. The snap was poor and the holder was still trying to get the ball down when his foot came through. He brushed off the praise.

"I didn't pay any attention to any of that," the kicker said. "It's my job to kick. It's his job to get it down."

Better than anyone, the holder understands the kicker. One of last year's leading kickers, an electrical engineering graduate, put the relationship in such a way as to underline both the holder's importance and the kicker's different way of looking at things.

"He isn't my holder," this booter insisted. "I'm his kicker."

The pursuit of the perfect kick leads the kicker to practice, practice and more practice.

Kickers, generally a cerebral group, tend to set things in order quickly. An East Coast booter, for example, was once challenged on the use of the kicking tee. The guy said a kicker is already talented, the tee is an unfair advantage. The kicker dispatched him neatly. "They don't make Tony Dorsett wear heavier shoes, do they?" he said.

The kicker is possibly the most welcome character in football. He is "Everyman" doing what every man cannot do. He is a different kind of hero, sometimes goat. Is he part of the team, or just a lonely soul in pursuit of the perfect kick? Yes and no. He is like the virtuoso standing before the orchestra—they are one, and yet separate. And if he must supply the comic relief at his own expense, so be it. Just let him kick.

"Look at that guy," a bystander said one day, at an Eastern school. Practice had ended and the field was empty, except for the kicker, who stayed to practice his art. He was before his altar, the goal posts—but no holder, no ball. Nothing but kick, kick, kick, through thin air.

"What's wrong with that?" the other guy said. "He's just practicing his swing."

"Yeah," the first guy said. "And watching the ball go through."

Kicker and holder are really a team unto themselves.

GOOD NEWS FOR PEOPLE 7'2" AND UNDER.

If you've always thought a little car meant a lot of crowding, you've obviously never looked into a Volkswagen Rabbit.

There happens to be so much room in a Rabbit that all 7'2" of Wilt Chamberlain can fit comfortably into the driver's seat.

Because the Rabbit has even more headroom than a Rolls-Royce.

As well as more room for people and things than practically every other imported car in its class.

Including every Datsun. Every Toyota. Every Honda, Mazda, and Renault.

Not to mention every small Ford and Chevy.

And, of course, what's all the more impressive about the room you get in a Rabbit is that it comes surrounded by the Rabbit itself. The car that, according to Car and Driver Magazine, "...does more useful and rewarding things than any other small car in the world..."

So how can you go wrong?

With the Rabbit you not only get the comfort of driving the most copied car in America.

You also get the comfort of driving a very comfortable car.

Because it may look like a Rabbit on the outside.

But it's a Rabbit on the inside.

FINDING THE RIGHT R₀ FOR FOOTBALL

by Bob Cohn, Tallahassee DEMOCRAT

It's a special individual that can play football at the collegiate level. But the player that can also excel scholastically, well, he is very special indeed.

One such player for the Seminoles is defensive end Scott Warren. You may have noticed Warren harassing Arizona State runners last weekend on the way to the Seminoles 31-3 rout of the Sun Devils. But if playing football that night wasn't enough to keep his mind busy, he had to travel to Lakeland the next morning to take some tests. These tests lasted from 8 a.m. until 5:30 p.m., and helped determine if Warren gets into medical school.

Actually, Warren should have found the schedule a cinch. In addition to being a football player, a full-time job to many, he has filled his hours like any other pre-med student. Last winter and spring Warren spent Saturday nights working in the emergency room of Tallahassee Memorial Regional Medical Center watching the parade of drunks, crazies and just plain unfortunate folks who make Saturday night their busiest time of the week.

Then there was classes that Warren was required to attend. Driver Education? The History of the Mint Julep? Hardly. Warren, a senior chemistry science major, went for it all—organic chemistry, physics, analytical geometry. His grade point average through three years is about 3.2, although lately it's been up in the 3.6-3.8 range.

All this would be well and good if Warren was a scrubeenie who played tackling dummy during practice. But the fact is, Warren plays real football. Now in his final year as a Seminole, he has started regularly since his third game of his freshman year. He is agile, quick and strong. You can't fake it for that long.

Warren, from Titusville, has known he wanted to enter medicine since he was a kid. He was in poor health as a child, suffering from asthma and bouts with pneumonia. At 6-foot-3, 215 pounds, he shows no signs of past afflictions, but the memories have remained and provided further inspiration to go back to the hospital as doctor rather than patient.

"It would seem like I'd want to stay away (from hospitals), but I don't," Warren said. "That type of environment fascinates me. I think I can help people. In medicine, you see the results of what you're doing."

Warren said he was particularly turned-on by his experience working in the emergency room. His main function was what he labeled "public relations." Warren acted as the liaison between doctor and patient and family, providing reassurance that everything was alright, or, at least, that a doctor would be in attendance as soon as possible.

He was also allowed to watch the doctors at work. "I really enjoyed it, getting to see them working in emergency situations," he said. "They explained things to me, and, knowing I was pre-med, they were very cooperative."

After spending the time seeing how it's done, Warren said he became thoroughly convinced where his future lay.

"Working there got me really excited about medicine," he said. "I saw how the stuff I was learning in the classroom was all related to it."

"It got me more fired up. It reassured and reaffirmed to me what I want to do. Sometimes you have a goal, and you say what it is, but you don't know what it will be like. But now I know. It means long hours, and hard work. But it's something I'll enjoy."

Warren said he is uncertain about the field in which he would like to specialize, ticking off such diverse possibilities as orthopedics, family practice and plastic surgery. As for professional football, Warren said he would give it a try, "only if I got to go to medical school in the off-season."

"I'd like to play to see how it goes," he said. "If I got the chance, I'd give it all I had. If I didn't (get the chance), I wouldn't let it upset me."

The coaches know Warren as being dedicated, tireless, fiercely competitive. But as a defensive lineman playing first in the shadow of Willie Jones, and now Ron Simmons, Warren gets little of the spotlight.

His most publicized feat last season was a play during the Syracuse game when he and linebacker Reggie Herring made a quarterback sandwich of the Orangemen's Bill Hurley. Cracked ribs were inflicted and Hurley missed practically all of the season.

Six simple ways to get better mileage.

1. REMOVE EXCESS WEIGHT.

Your trunk is an expensive storeroom. Because a loaded trunk will hurt your mileage. In fact, for every 100 pounds removed, the average person can improve mileage enough to drive an extra 200 miles a year.

2. CHECK YOUR TIRES.

Air can save you gas, because too little air in your tires usually means less mileage. Check your owner's manual or tire dealer for the maximum recommended pressure. And always check pressures when your tires are cold. Early morning is best.

If you're buying tires, consider radials. They can be worth an extra mile per gallon.

3. USE A MULTIGRADE OIL.

A 10W/30 or 10W/40 oil causes less drag inside your engine than a regular 30 or 40 weight. This can mean better mileage. So if you're using a single grade oil now, consider switching next time you get an oil change.

4. CHECK YOUR AIR CLEANER.

A dirty air cleaner hurts mileage, because it prevents your engine from breathing properly. Remember that in dusty or polluted areas, air cleaners should be checked more frequently, and replaced when they're dirty.

5. KEEP YOUR WHEELS IN LINE.

When a wheel is out of line, it hurts both your tires and your mileage. So take a look at your tires. If there is more wear on one side, you should have your alignment checked.

6. CHECK SPARK PLUGS.

Worn or fouled plugs cause hard starting, loss of power, and poor mileage. Plugs should have no rounded electrodes, and the inside should be a light brown to tan color.

Also, check the plug wires. Worn or cracked plug wires can short out and cause missing and fouled plugs.

The irony was mentioned to Warren: How can a person dedicated to curing people and relieving pain be involved in the brutality that is college football? And be good at it?

Warren smiled an I've-heard-that-one-before smile. "I couldn't feel bad about it (the play) because I didn't do anything dirty," he said. "If you go out there to play football, there's always a risk. But I've never gone out and hurt anyone intentionally.

"I just want to do the best job I can. I enjoy putting a good hit on someone."

Perhaps an occasional devastating blow keeps Warren in good stead with his teammates, who care more about how he stacks up the sweep than how familiar he is with the unequal division of cytoplasm.

He said he is well-accepted, and conversely, accepts the good-natured teasing he naturally invites. One nickname, he said, is "Mr. 4.0" (a perfect grade point average). During lapses in practice, Gladden, the defensive end coach, is apt to call Warren, "the dumbest smart guy I know."

The name that appeals to Warren most of all, though, is "Doctor."

"I like that one," he said. "I'd like to hear that from everyone in a few years."

GOOD TIMES

Good times begin at the Publix Deli. You'll find everything from complete Deli Dinners, including fried chicken and all the fixin's, to sandwiches and salads all ready to take out. And whether you're entertaining formally or casually, Deli platters are a great way to get the good times underway.

As the Rain Fell...So Did the Sun Devils

Following a narrow 17-14 victory over Southern Mississippi in the season's opening game, the Seminoles routed Arizona State 31-3 in the rain last Saturday in Tampa. Pictured are defenders Mark Macek and Arthur Scott, top right, and tailback Greg Ramsey, lower right. Also caught in action is receiver Jackie Flowers (who believe it or not makes this reception), top left, and freshman Ricky Williams, lower left.

THE FIRST CHEVY OF THE '80s. CITATION. OUR MOST SUCCESSFUL NEW CAR EVER.

Ever since its introduction, people have been flooding Chevy showrooms across the country to see the 1980 Chevy Citation. And according to Retail Delivery Reports, 33,765 units were sold in its first three weeks, more than any new entry Chevrolet has ever introduced.

MID-SIZE ROOM FOR 5.

Citation's engine is mounted sideways, so the passenger compartment can be bigger. In fact, in EPA interior dimensions, Citation is classified as a mid-size car. With the back seat folded down there's room enough for two adults in front and 30 bags of groceries in back.

0 TO 50 IN 9 SECONDS FLAT WITH THE AVAILABLE V6.

In engineering tests, Citation goes from 0 to 50 in 9 seconds flat. That's with available 2.8 Liter V6 engine and automatic transmission. California figures not available. (Citation is equipped with GM-built engines produced by various divisions. See your dealer for details.)

EASY ON GAS. 24 EPA ESTIMATED MPG. 38 HIGHWAY ESTIMATE.

That's with Citation's standard 2.5 Liter 4-cylinder engine and manual transmission. (Manual transmission currently not available in California. Calif. estimates lower.)

Citation's standard 4-speed transmission is made to conserve gas. It's an overdrive. And at cruising speeds the 4th gear lets the engine run slower than with a conventional transmission, helping to get impressive fuel economy.

IMPRESSIVE LONG-RANGE CRUISING ESTIMATES, TOO.

And Citation's long-range cruising estimates are just as impressive. [336] miles based on EPA estimated MPG (city) mileage figures, and 532 miles based on estimated highway MPG. Range figures obtained by multiplying Citation's 14-gallon fuel tank capacity rating by the EPA mileage estimates.

REMEMBER: Compare the circled estimated MPG to the estimated MPG of other cars. You may get different mileage and range depending on your speed, trip length and weather. Your actual city mileage and range will be less in heavy city traffic. Your actual mileage will probably be less than the highway estimate.

YOU'VE GOT TO DRIVE IT TO BELIEVE IT.

When you drive Citation you'll see what all the excitement is about. The way it feels. The way it maneuvers. The way it rides. And Citation's front wheel drive puts approximately 65% of its weight over the "driving wheels" to give you impressive traction on wet or snowy roads.

IT'S A WHOLE NEW KIND OF COMPACT CAR.

There's still a lot about Citation that we haven't mentioned. Like slip stream design to cut down on wind resistance and wind noise. The hidden cargo area in all hatchback models, so what's inside is protected from view. A dual diagonal braking system. And much, much more. That's why we encourage you to see your Chevy dealer and test drive the 1980 Chevy Citation today. This could be the car you've had in mind.

HONDA PRELUDE

HONDA ACCORD®
4-DOOR SEDAN

At Honda we have never believed in making lots of different types of cars. But 1979 is a different kind of year for Honda. We've introduced two new cars. The Accord 4-Door Sedan and the Honda Prelude. You might say we've opened things up a bit. Literally.

Our new Prelude boasts a power-operated, tinted glass moonroof as standard equipment. The moonroof comes with a manual sunshade, like the window shade on a jetliner.

Not only does our new Accord sedan have four doors, it has a nice, big trunk as well. It also has a lever that allows you to release the lid from the driver's seat. So if you're thinking about buying a new car, take a close look at our new Hondas. And open the door to simplicity.

HONDA

We make it simple.

What Do You Want From College?

A Sense Of Purpose? Add It To Your Schedule.

Thousands of Army ROTC graduates, from hundreds of college campuses, have become leaders in our country's volunteer Army.

Some enrolled in ROTC for financial aid to complete college (nearly $2500 during their junior and senior years). Others for the management training and experience offered by Army ROTC courses. Still others for the positions of immediate leadership responsibility following graduation, as officers in the active Army, Reserves, and Army National Guard.

But most enrolled also to serve their country. Men and women from the north, the east, the south, the west . . . from small rural communities and large urban areas.

They've shown that you don't have to be from Tennessee to be a volunteer, or from Texas to stand tall for your country.

Pregame humor Holtz' best tension-easer

Many football coaches become extremely upset over any unforeseen happening that affects their squad's timetable prior to an important game. An exception is Lou Holtz of University of Arkansas. He seems to thrive on surprises.

In the Arkansas dressing room before the scheduled kickoff of its 1978 Orange Bowl game against Oklahoma, coach Holtz was keenly mindful of the fact that he had been told, officially, to have his team in the tunnel to take the field at precisely 40 seconds after 8:14 p.m.

"I timed my pregame talk to fit the situation," Holtz recalls. "I climaxed it by telling our players how underrated they were, that here was the golden opportunity to go out and gain the respect of people throughout the nation. But suddenly there appeared on the scene the Orange Bowl committeeman assigned to us, a very nice man, Judge Peter B. Fay of the United States Fifth District Court. Quickly, Judge Fay informed me that the Rose Bowl game on NBC was running late and our game, also on NBC, would be delayed at least eight minutes, and maybe 10 or 15 minutes.

"What to do with this unexpected extra time? I told my players that my repertoire of jokes was wearing mighty thin, and I wanted some volunteers to take the floor and tell their favorite jokes. But I said the jokes had to be short ones.

"Well, that's what we did to kill time, and some of their stories were terrible. But the main thing was that the boys were loose and in a good mood when we did take the field."

Holtz's final joke, reportedly, was to advise his squad that the last 11 players out of the dressing room had to start against Oklahoma.

Arkansas recovered two Oklahoma fumbles in the first quarter and trounced the heavily favored Sooners, 31-6, although playing without its leading ground gainer, No. 1 pass receiver and another running back, all of whom had been suspended from the Orange Bowl squad for a December dormitory incident. It was one of the most stunning upsets in the history of bowl games; and who can say that Coach Holtz's quick decision on how to spend those unanticipated extra moments, counteracting tension, didn't have a lot to do with the win.

"I couldn't believe the pregame dressing room scene," Judge Fay related afterward. "Lou even asked if I had a joke to tell. I passed, but there was a remarkable coincidence I experienced about four months after that night.

"The judges of the Fifth Circuit were holding a meeting in New Orleans along with the State Bar Association presidents from six states, and some guests. Our principal speaker was Vice-President Walter Mondale, and we were operating with the secret service on a split-second schedule much like those NBC-TV people had done at the Orange Bowl.

"As I was presiding at the morning sessions at which Mondale was to appear, it was my assignment to introduce him. He was due to enter the room exactly at 11:49. I planned the program accordingly, giving the preliminary speakers just enough time to be through a minute or so before Mondale arrived.

"During the middle of the last speech, a member of the vice-president's advance party got word to me that Mondale would be 18 minutes late and that none of the 1,200 people present were to leave the room.

"Well, I announced to them what the situation was and asked their indulgence and patience. I was in a heck of a spot. Then I remembered what coach Holtz had done at Miami. To the crowd I said: 'The best storyteller I know is Judge Walter Gewin of Alabama and I want him to come up here and tell a story.' He did, it was received with loud laughter and a line of volunteers followed him to the podium, filling the gap for 20 minutes until the vice-president arrived. I always will be indebted to coach Holtz for showing me how to handle an emergency."

When Fred Pancoast was head coach at Vanderbilt, just before a homecoming game he read to his squad a brief letter which he said he had received that morning from an alumnus. It went: "Dear coach—We are behind you 100 percent. We know that winning isn't everything. We just want you and your boys to have fun every Saturday. It makes no difference whether you win a single game, or whether you finish on the top or the bottom of the Southeastern Conference, as long as your boys play fair and get wholesome exercise. The reason I'm writing this in crayon is that they won't let me have anything sharp here."

The late Rex Enright, as University of South Carolina head coach in 1955, his last season, faced his squad before the Virginia game after having lost four in a row. "Boys, we are going to try something new," he said. "The minute the game is over, I want you players who are on the field to form this semicircle. (He drew a semicircle on the blackboard.) Then, I want you players who are on the bench to rush over and close the circle. (He completed the circle with his crayon.) I'll be in the middle of the circle and we'll all run like hell for the dressing room."

It isn't known how much the gag helped, but South Carolina broke its losing streak.

The American Eagle Radial.

Why it belongs on America's finest cars.

The Goodyear American Eagle Radial tire is as revolutionary today as our first rayon cord tire was in 1938 and our Polyglas in 1967 and the Polysteel Radial when introduced in 1974.

What makes the American Eagle Radial the tire for today is belts of Flexten cord. It is made from a flexible, man-made aramid fiber that is, pound for pound, stronger than steel. Flexten cord—a step ahead of steel—makes the American Eagle Radial tough and strong. Yet, the American Eagle is gratifyingly smooth riding, too.

Comfort, control and confidence are the qualities of the American Eagle Radial... the unique luxury tire designed by Goodyear for the American driver and the American road. We invite you to inspect and to enjoy American ingenuity... from Goodyear.

The raccoon coat may have been hung up in the closet with the button down shirt, but the zest for college football had not waned as the '70s began.

And, then, as Greeks and girls once again became important things, the college game picked up steam.

A nation got up to watch season-ending thrillers on Thanksgiving morning.

The 1970s saw freshmen become eligible to play on the varsity again for the first time since after World War II, it saw restrictions on scholarships and the size of coaching staffs, it saw rules implemented to save knees and the athletic futures of young men, and it saw the advent of the veer and the wishbone.

It also saw the departure and return of two of its most successful coaches. Just like the millions of fans and alums everywhere, they couldn't stay away from college football.

"In the 1970s there has been a greater emphasis on the skilled players in college football," said one well-respected coach. "The early '70s were marked by the veer at Houston and then the wishbone at Texas. Now, as the '70s are on their way out, the trend is toward the passing game and a mobile quarterback.

"It's a wonderful game, one that will always be changing. With over 600 schools, somebody is always coming up with something new."

The freshness, the kids, the cheerleaders, the bands, whatever it is, people like it.

It is truly remarkable that the college game—the same game played by Red Grange and Ernie Nevers and Johnny Lujack—is now seen by more people on television and in the stadiums across the land as well than at any time in its history.

Colleges saw 34 million people attend games played in 1978 and the American Broadcasting Company pay $30 million a year for the television rights to do games of all levels. All records.

And although the football giants dominated the 1970s as they did the 1960s before that, the game has moved away from an elitism, rather than towards it.

Instead, legislation worked toward parity of its members and television contracts of the late 1970s began to ensure television for Division I-AA, Division II and Division III as well as Division I.

In 1977, ABC televised 13 national games as it had done through most of the 1970s, but in 1978 it covered 45 regional

What a difference a model year can make.

That's all it's taken for our all new 1980 Pontiac Phoenix to score 41 percent better EPA estimated MPG over its 1979 counterpart. (Based on a comparison of 1979 and 1980 Pontiac Phoenix models with standard powertrains.* The highway percentage increase is 42 percent.)

EPA ESTIMATE MPG HWY ESTIMATE

It's all the more exciting when you consider these 1980 Phoenix mileage estimates.

Remember: Compare the circled estimated MPG with that of other cars. Your mileage may vary depending on speed, trip length and weather. And your actual highway mileage will probably be less than the highway estimate. Standard powertrain not currently avail. in Calif.

But great mileage is just the beginning of the excitement. Phoenix for 1980 has been dramatically redesigned from the ground up. Choose from the rakish new five-passenger Phoenix Coupe and the sporty and versatile Phoenix Hatchback.

You get an exciting new chapter of Pontiac driving fun. With front-wheel drive. Rack and pinion steering. And MacPherson strut front suspension.

Another exciting thought. You get even more standard features than on our well-equipped '79 Phoenix. Such new standards as radial tuned suspension, integral body-color bumpers, column-mounted dimmer/washer switch, dome lamp switches on all the doors, load floor Hatchback carpeting and much more.

That's more Pontiac.

So don't let the excitement pass you by. Buy or lease the all new Phoenix Coupe and Hatchback at your Pontiac dealer's. It's going to be quite a year.

games. Clearly, the game was to be seen by more people and from more locations.

If you wonder that the college game really is that popular, and if it can compete in homes across the land against the NBA, the NFL, the NHL, the NASL, major league baseball, Soap, and Laverne and Shirley, then look to the commercial market and what the going rate is for television rights.

In 1976, following the 1975 season and the best ratings the colleges have ever had, ABC signed a contract to pay $18 million a year on a two-year contract to do college football.

People were impressed. Then, two lion watched in 1970, 8.7 in 1971, 8.6 in 1972, 8.0 in 1973, 8.2 in 1974, 9.2 in 1975, and a record 10.0 in 1976. Recent ratings indicated that 9.6 watched in 1977 and 8.9 in 1978. In the decade of the '70s, ABC went from doing ten national games and 26 regionals in 1969 to 13 nationals and 45 regionals in 1979.

As far as people turning out on brisk Saturdays to sit in the stadiums, the numbers are astounding.

In fact, helped by a grass roots surge in Divisions II and III, college football attendance in 1978 enjoyed its second largest increase in history—1,346,428 spectators for an all-time national high of 34,251,606 spectators.

eastern, Big Eight, Pacific-10, Southwest, Atlantic Coast Conference, and the Western Athletic Conference—were up 1,761 per game in 1978, their biggest increase ever to an all-time high of 48,215 for each game.

And for the first time since 1970-71, both the top seven conferences and all other teams in the country went up together two straight years.

Which was significant. Every year previously back to 1967, the independents were up in the odd-numbered years and down in the even-numbered years. So it was rare and significant that the big conferences should go up at the same time that the independents and years later, ABC and the NCAA sat down and negotiated a four-year contract to last through 1981. It was a total package of $118 million, or $30 million a year.

Wide open passing attacks coupled with high scoring offenses have drawn record crowds to college stadiums throughout the '70s.

Never had college football had the leverage to extract a four-year contract before, or demand that the package include twice the regional games previously done and a season peppered with games from the other divisions.

Obviously, ABC had something it liked and wanted to keep.

All through the '70s its ratings steadily, if not consistently, improved. In terms of millions of viewers watching college football on an average Saturday, Nielsen ratings indicated that 8.3 mil-

It was the 24th increase in the last 25 seasons of college football attendance. It climbed in 1954 over 1953 and has gone up every year since, except for a tiny drop in 1974. Since 1954, the third year of the NCAA television plan, national attendance has more than doubled, from 17.0 million then to more than 34 million now.

In 1978, NCAA Division II schools produced the largest percentage increase in per-game average at 9.48 percent. Next came Division III at an increase of 8.59 percent, followed by Division IA, up 3.89 percent.

Significantly, the top seven major college conferences—Big Ten, South-small schools were also going up.

And, to boot, it came at a time when the NCAA had doubled its regional television package.

While it was gratifying to everyone that average attendance was up for all 643 four-year colleges with varsity teams, the big numbers, quite naturally were still with the big schools.

One major college, for example, ran its streak of 100,000-plus crowds to 22 en route to its fifth consecutive national attendance crown and set an all-time high for the fourth straight season. Its average in 1978 was 104,948 for six home games.

Quality. Again. And again. And again.

Quality makes them worth asking for.

ABOUT THE AUTHOR—Blaine Newnam, sports editor of The Eugene (Ore.) Register-Guard since 1971, feels that relevancy is a must for sports writing. "It must answer the questions of the fans. It must be done with style, a style encompassing accuracy, entertainment, integrity and a real care for the reader's needs." Newnam, a journalism major at the University of California at Berkeley, authored the book The Jogging Experience and was voted Oregon's Sports Writer of the Year in 1974.

For a while it was presumed that the college game would flourish only in college towns, and not in areas where the pros played. In 1978, one Southwest Conference school increased its home attendance by 24,921 a game to 51,959 even though playing in the same state with a major football power and a Super Bowl champion.

It was winning, a wide-open passing game and an extensive, multi-faceted promotional campaign which produced the increase.

In 1973, the NCAA realigned its members with a Division II and a Division III and then starting in 1978 went to Division I-AA for schools nearly the size and strength of those playing Division IA but looking for a different scope of competition.

Even stormy weather does not keep today's fans away from the game.

At the same time the NCAA membership voted to control the growth of big-time college football, hopeful of both keeping expenses in check and moving toward a parity which might increase interest and attendance at the other schools in the league.

Coaching staffs were limited to eight assistants and scholarships were limited to 105 and eventually to 95. Schools were allowed to give no more than 30 scholarships in a single year.

There was cost-cutting, to be sure, but moreover there were more good football players to be shared. A football power might take its favorite 30, but there were still some very good players to be taken by others.

There is no question that a few schools still go to most of the bowl games. But considering the two decades just past, only four schools ranked in the top ten during both ten-year periods.

If you wondered why more people all the time are watching college football, it might well be that the teams are more offensive than ever before.

In 1975, college football teams were averaging 408.9 yards per game (both teams) as the wishbones and veers put running backs in the open field as they never had been before.

At the same time, passing, which started the decade at 305.3 yards per game in 1970, hit a bottom of 239.2 in 1975, but then started coming back up in 1976 to 246.9 and finally to 277.7 in 1978.

Running dropped off slightly, but in 1978 it was the best of both worlds for the offense—rushing was at 358.2 (the seventh highest in history) and passing was at 277.7 (the fifth highest in history). The total was 662.9, or the highest in history. The key? Greater efficiency of offense, and more highly-skilled players.

In addition, 1978 saw all field-goal accuracy and total field goal records smashed. In eight years since 1970, the percentage of accuracy of field goals was up 25 percent.

In the 1970s the college football teams put an average of more than 40 points on the scoreboard (both teams combined) while gaining more yardage than ever before.

The excitement didn't go unnoticed, not by the fans, not by the networks. Who says a raccoon coat can't be in style forever?

Booster chairman Bob Camp.

All Seminole Boosters share the enthusiastic desire for a winning athletic program at Florida State University. In order to sustain a successful program we must meet the financial challenges of athletic excellence. The goal of the Boosters in 1979 is to raise $1,000,000 in support of the total athletic program.

Results of this year's campaign to date show Booster contributions up almost 25% over 1978. Contributions currently add up to 20% of the total athletic budget.

While most visible and usually associated with the football season, the Boosters actually support the entire athletic program of football, basketball, baseball, track, cross country, swimming, tennis, golf and women's athletics.

"While our ultimate goal is raising funds for student athlete scholarships," says Andy Miller, executive director of the Seminole Boosters, "we are interested in working with anyone who is striving to improve the status of intercollegiate athletics at Florida State University."

Bob Camp, a Tallahassee businessman, is serving as chairman of the Seminole Boosters this year. Other officers are vice chairman Hurley Booth, treasurer Jimmy Carter and secretary Dr. Gene Davidson.

"We have developed programs that can involve all the friends of Florida State, no matter what their level of contribution, and we urge those who wish to become involved to contact our office."

The Boosters (through the Tribe of 100) has sponsored the Garnet and Gold spring football game, the Hubert Green celebrity golf tournament, the annual ticket drives and various other projects.

However, Booster activities are not limited to the Tallahassee area. There are active Booster groups around the state and in Georgia. These groups arrange charter bus trips to games, assist coaches in recruiting, and, most importantly aid in raising funds in their area.

The fund raising effort centers around the Area Chairmen, who are volunteer organizers and leaders throughout designated areas of the state. The climax of the spring fund drive is a statewide series of golf tournaments and dinners featuring Bobby Bowden and other key members of the athletic program.

Contributors receive many benefits throughout the year. Boosters receive a membership card, preferred seating, Booster car tag, Seminole Sports-news newsletter, tax deduction, reserve parking, and more.

Above all, the major benefit is the satisfaction of seeing FSU's student athletes and athletic program succeed.

To become a member of the Seminole Boosters in 1979, just contact the Booster office at P.O. Box 1353, Tallahassee, Fla. 32302 or call 904/644-3484. Annual Seminole Booster gifts range from the $10 introductory minimum, to over $5,000. We hope that you will join in making 1979 our best year ever in support of Florida State athletics.

WHY MORE AND MORE PEOPLE ARE ASKING FOR A CHAIN SAW THEY CAN'T EVEN PRONOUNCE.

Poolen. Pullen. Polann. With a name like Poulan, getting people to say the name right may be asking a lot.

On the other hand, people ask an awful lot of our saws. Quick starting. Extra cutting power. Quiet operation. Beautiful styling. Durability. Affordability.

And we deliver all that plus a lot of other standard features, no matter which Poulan saw they buy. From the Poulan Micro XXV right on up to our pro models.

At Poulan, we figure the more we put into our saws, the less people have to put into cutting.

Maybe that's why more and more people keep asking for our saws. And as long as they keep doing that, they can say the name any way they like.

MEET THE TIGHT END

by Larry Bortstein

For years, the tight end had one responsibility—to block a linebacker and help an offensive foray spring loose. In recent years, however, the demands of playing tight end have become greater and greater—some think as varied as the demands of the linebacker on defense.

In fact, mastery of the tight end spot requires, in some minds, the best combination of skills of any football player on the field.

As one West Coast athletic director sees it, "The tight end has to be a pass receiver-blocker combination, and he can expect contact on every play. Most of his routes are to the inside, where things are at their most violent."

Though the prototype tight end is someone who stands well over six feet and scales well over 200 pounds, many feel it is a player's skill and ability to withstand the varied nature of the position that make a successful tight end.

"He's kind of an all-everything guy," said a Southeastern Conference coach of the tight end spot. "He has to do so many things, and that means he has to block, catch passes, and run. He probably has the ability to play a lot of positions on the team. Some teams get along without one, especially on the college level, but a good tight end will open the defense up."

The feeling that the tight end might be the best athlete on the field was echoed by others. As one Big Eight assistant put it, "The tight end has to be a good enough blocker to make the run offense go and he has to be an adequate receiver to make the pass a threat."

Perhaps the oddest aspect of the tight end position is that

by David Condon, Chicago TRIBUNE

Johnny Lujack guided the Notre Dame teams of the mid-forties.

Johnny Lujack and Notre Dame's 1946 Irish, pointed toward a national championship, opened the season with a 26-6 triumph over an Illinois eleven destined to romp in the first modern Big Ten-Pacific Coast Rose Bowl game. Three days afterwards, the Chicago Tribune's Wilfrid Smith—founding president of the Football Writers Association—was telling his local lodge gathering:

"I've watched college ball for 30 years. This postwar era will be the most exciting we've ever known. Army still is king in the East. With players like Alex and Lou Agase, Perry Moss, Mac Wenskunas, and Buddy Young, the Illini will be tough.

"But Notre Dame and Michigan each might go three years without a loss because they don't meet. And Notre Dame has the greatest all-around college player we've ever seen.

"He's Johnny Lujack. You remember him from '43. In the next two years Lujack could make us forget every other back we've seen. He does it all. Superbly."

Ed "Moose" Krause, an assistant to Frank Leahy at Notre Dame, nodded agreement.

"Smitty's right," said Krause. "Lujack's the greatest all-around Notre Dame back ever. Coach Leahy thinks he's the Four Horsemen rolled into one."

Lujack was to direct the team to 17 victories and a scoreless tie in the next two seasons. Smith had written in that mornings paper:

"Lujack is the irreplaceable man in the Irish attack. He is one of the best forward passers in collegiate football, a dependable and accurate punter, and his knowledge of the T formation gives his mates confidence in his judgment."

Now Smith was telling the writers: "I did Lujack an injustice emphasizing his offensive talent and the out-of-bounds punting that kept those Illini backs at bay. There was one defensive play that proved Lujack's supreme value."

The Illini had possession on their 33. Buddy Young, a sprinter who left no forwarding address when he took off with the ball, zoomed by Jack Zilly, the ND right end. Irish secondary defenders were blocked out.

"But Lujack had quickly smelled the

What it means to be a breed apart.

Imagination, instinct, and versatility (not size alone) set Merrill Lynch apart from the rest of the herd.

Too many people see only the size of Merrill Lynch; they miss the subtler qualities that truly make us a breed apart. For example:

Imagination. An oil exploration company needed $75 million, but traditional ways of raising it would have overly diluted earnings or impaired financial flexibility. Our solution: a public offering of convertible preferred stock.

Instinct. A corporate client wanted to buy back 200,000 shares of its own stock. Getting the best price was a question of market timing...of knowing when to walk out of the market and let the price sink, when to buy aggressively.

That's instinct. And it helped us buy all 200,000 shares within 1/2 point of the starting price.

Versatility. We can also help you reach your personal financial goals, despite changing markets and tough tax laws. As your assets grow and your needs change, your Account Executive can keep pace with equities, commodities, bonds, annuities, and tax investments.

its responsibilities change from team to team. In general, most other positions make the same demands from team to team—the running backs run, the wide receivers go out for passes, the linemen block or tackle. But depending on his team — or even on particular game situations—the tight end may be asked to do any and all of these things (with the possible exception of tackle) during the course of a single afternoon.

And even if the tight end does not tackling himself, he must have a better-than-average knack for breaking the tackles of a defensive man in order to do his own job. "The tight end usually has to be strong enough to get past the linebacker on his side," says an East Coast coach, "even a linebacker that outweighs him by 30 to 40 pounds. That is, if the offense is going to have the kind of variety you want. Often, a block or a break of a tackle by the tight end is the key to making a particular play work, whether it's a run or pass. Very often, the tight end is the guy you're disguising the whole play around. And if the tight end is a legitimate threat to receive the ball on the play—whether you actually throw to him or not—the defense has to consider him in its planning.

"This means," concludes the coach, "that a tight end in many cases has to be the best athlete on the field. And if you've got a real good one, well, you've got something."

The position of tight end has changed over the years. Not too long ago, a slower man would be assigned to the spot. He would be expected to block and to keep the defense away from the running backs.

Today, teams need a tight end who can catch the ball, at least a little. While he need not be a gazelle, the tight end should know something about how to run a pass route, how to cut—all the things a receiver has to do. In earlier years, the tight end was seen as a primary receiver only in desperate situations. Today a lot of passing plays are geared expressly for the tight end—when he is the type of player who has pass-catching abilities. And you can bet that everyone is looking for that type of player.

Intelligence is also viewed as a chief requisite of the tight end, and one with real "smarts" is that much more valuable. A Midwest assistant coach gives this example: "An audible means most players shift blocking assignments, but the tight end must quickly shift from a pass pattern to a blocking assignment. This type of adjustment takes a lot of concentration plus an unusual amount of talent. Because he must make these types of adjustments and still carry out the assignment with a high degree of skill, the tight end is, indeed, the best football player on the field."

One Northwest man puts it this way: "Sometimes you have a player who comes to your school as a tight end, but you can't afford the luxury of keeping him at that spot all the time. You have a manpower shortage somewhere else, and if you have the right kind of athlete, you can take a boy who's been a tight end and move him inside on the offensive line to a tackle or guard spot, or make him a wide receiver. The real good tight ends who play their entire college careers at only that position are at a premium.

"Is the tight end the best athlete on the field? When you've got the kind who can do many different things, the answer is probably yes. The truth is that at many schools, the all-around tight end is too valuable to use there all the time. If he can catch passes, you might want to flank him outside to take advantage of his receiving, and if he blocks very well, you might prefer having him work most of the time as an offensive lineman."

The ability to withstand constant physical pounding is discussed by a man who coaches a Southern independent. "One thing the tight end is almost guaranteed is physical contact on every play," he says. "And that tends to limit the number of guys who really enjoy the position. Not only does he have to be a big, strong kid, but he really has to enjoy that shot on every play, even the ones in which he doesn't even figure. It comes with the territory, that shot in the side, that punishing block, all of that, and a lot of kids have had trouble staying with it, even when they had what it took physically.

"Tight end isn't for everybody," he concludes.

And not everybody agrees on the overall worth of the tight end. A coach in the Western Athletic Conference says, "I don't think the tight end is the finest player on the field. On offense, I think the quarterback and running backs are better players. On defense, I think the linebackers are better. Certainly the tight end has to be a cut above the average kid. But I think at tight end you can get by with a competitor who can run and catch the football. In college football, the tight end is a combination tackle and wide receiver. He's probably not the best tackle on the team, nor the best wide receiver. There are exceptions, of course. You might find a few who are complete players, but more often than not they are in-between players."

This opinion was in the minority among those contacted for purposes of researching this article. But even this dissenting view points out the multifaceted nature of a successful tight end play. Even in suggesting that the tight end doesn't necessarily have to excel either at line play or at pass-catching, the WAC coach concedes that the tight end is asked to do both with great frequency.

"Just being asked to do all that makes the tight end one of the most valuable guys on the team," says a Big Ten Coach. "Maybe that's the key word here for a tight end—valuable. Obviously, there are excellent athletes at every position. A defensive lineman who weighs 275 pounds may be a great athlete, but you're not going to ask him to be a runner or receiver, and a 185-pound safety may be a fine athlete, but he won't help you on the line.

"So maybe that's what it really comes down to—the value a good tight end has to a team," concluded the Big Ten man. It's something you can't put a figure on, or give a proper evaluation to. You know, if they ever changed football to a 10-man game, the tight end might be the first position eliminated on offense. But the way the game is played now, that tight end might be the one guy you couldn't do without."

You, gas mileage and the 1980 Buick Skylark.

The Skylark is equipped with GM-built engines produced by various divisions. Your dealer has details.

With Skylark's EPA estimated mileage and 14-gallon fuel tank, your gas station attendant may even forget what you look like.

Skylark offers an EPA estimated 24 mpg, estimated 38 for highway. Remember: Compare this estimate with the "estimated mpg" of other cars.

You may get different mileage depending on your speed, trip length and weather. Your actual highway mileage will probably be less than the estimated highway fuel economy. Estimates lower in California.

It just might be the perfect car for you.

Sure, it's important these days to drive a car that's sensible in the gasoline mileage department. But you also want a car that performs. Happily, Skylark is both. With the standard 1980 2.5 liter 4-cylinder engine and available automatic transmission, it's quicker from 0-50 mph than last year's Skylark with the standard 3.8 liter V-6 and automatic. You'll like the 1980 Buick Skylark at gas stations—and between them. Talk to your Buick dealer about buying or leasing one. It just might be the perfect car for you.

THE BALANCED ATTACK GIVES A TEAM A DECIDED EDGE

by Mal Florence, Los Angeles TIMES

A popular Southeastern coach has run the gamut on offense from a conservative wishbone (with three or four passes a game) to a multiple or pro-styled attack.

Why has he converted to a more balanced brand of football? "Most teams are lining up in an eight-man defensive front now instead of seven," he says, "and it's difficult to run against the eight-man front but easier to pass on it. Because of this I think there is a trend away from pure option football."

Yet, this Southeastern coach was once identified with the coaching fraternity that believed that three things can happen when you pass—and two of them are bad (incompletions, interceptions).

"Most people assume that a passing game is a high risk offense," he says. "It is only if you have an unreliable quarterback. The risk diminishes in proportion to the intelligence of the quarterback."

"A so-called pro-type offense has a different connotation to

continued

Some schools renowned for their tailback-oriented offense won some big games last season—by passing.

Other schools, highly ranked in the wire service poll at the end of the season, have been eminently successful with a wishbone-style attack geared to the running game. But they operate from other formations and are not reluctant to pass.

Traditional advocates of power football and the running game are incorporating more passes into their offense.

There is a trend, many college coaches say, to a balanced offensive approach. This doesn't mean a 50-50 ration between the run and pass but the ability to be flexible.

"Defenses have become so sophisticated now that they can focus on any particular offensive phase of the game and take it away from you," says a prominent West Coast coach. "So an offense must be balanced. By balance I mean two things—to attack effectively someone who is, say, overplaying the run and to complete enough passes for consistent gains—not necessarily long passes—but a high percentage of completions."

Balance, the West Coast coach continued, isn't just an immediate reaction to a defensive scheme but must be part of your overall offensive philosophy.

"You just can't run the ball for seven games and then be put in a position where you have to pass and be able to do it," he says. "You can go down some roads you can't come back from. Nor can you win four games by passing 40 times and then all of a sudden be expected to run 50 times in a game in order to win. It can't be done."

BALANCED ATTACK

me than other people. To me it means we won't run any option. That's all.

"It's much easier to run the option against a seven-man front and harder to throw against it. It's the opposite with an eight-man front and it's difficult to find a quarterback who is both a good option runner and a good passer."

The West Coast coach says that if a quarterback is involved in the option game, he can't develop as a passer.

"In the pure option the quarterback is involved in every running play," he says. "But, if you're not running the option, the quarterback's presence isn't required as much when you're practicing the running game. So he has more time to improve his skills as a passer."

But balance isn't for every team. There are notable exceptions.

"A powerhouse that is so overwhelmingly effective with its power-running triple option can go against the percentages (defenses stacked against the run) and still be successful," the West Coast coach says. "There are exceptions to every rule and this case is an exception."

There is another side to the offensive spectrum. While some teams slug it out on the ground, others rely on passing for the main thrust of their offense.

A strong running back plays a key role in a successful offense.

Unusual? Maybe. But establishing the passing game first has been tremendously effective at schools with a strong throwing heritage.

"Certain teams seek balance but from a different angle," a Midwest coach says. "They don't throw just to be throwing but as a means of controlling the ball—and they do it very well. Then, they'll run at you when you're over-playing the pass. But there is always the constant threat of the pass."

So the team achieves balance in its own way.

How does a team defend against a balanced attack—one that has a fine runner and an accurate passer?

"A defense can be a containing one," says the Midwest coach. "It can try to out-flank the offense, especially if it is concerned about the passing game. Defenses try to take advantage of the field and which hash mark the offense is operating from."

"Or, the defense can be a gambling one—such as blitzes and constantly changing up. The danger is that in changing up you'll be in a defense on occasions that is suited to be exploited by the offense."

It's doubtful that the pass-minded offense is the forerunner of a collegiate trend. Nor can many teams emulate a devastating wishbone running game.

These are offensive philosophies that have been ingrained at certain schools for many years and can't be copied on an experimental basis.

But college defenses, more intricate and sound than they were even 10 years ago, are now dictating to offenses.

And the offense is getting the cue—more balance—run and pass—to keep the defense off balance.

play from safety," said Smith. "He came up to hold Buddy to a 4 yard gain. It'd have been a sure Illinois touchdown except for Lujack."

An incident of more lasting memory occurred later. Army's 1946 Black Knights, unbeaten in three seasons, were meeting the Fighting Irish. This was to be the college battle of all time. After more than three decades, perhaps it still is. In pre-game analysis, experts gave Army the edge one day, Notre Dame the next day. But at Notre Dame's last scrimmage before departure for New York, Lujack injured his right ankle. Get George Ratterman ready to quarterback, boys, and give the edge back to Army.

Lujack did play, in command of such Irish immortals as George Connor, Terry Brennan, and Emil "Six Yards" Sitko. Army had Felix "Doc" Blanchard, Glenn Davis, Arnold Tucker, and enough troops to have invaded Europe again.

That 1946 Army-Notre Dame game ended 0-0. It was summit meeting of the titans. Like a no-knockdown, 15-round draw between Rocky Marciano and Muhammad Ali. Subsequently a New York Times sportswriter observed:

"Only one thrust had a chance of breaking the tingling deadlock. The mighty Doc Blanchard broke into the clear, touchdown bound. Then Lujack came whirling from nowhere to hop down the practically unstoppable Doc."

Lujack still is asked about that play by callers at his automobile agency in Davenport, Ia., the city where he and Lujack won the Heisman Trophy in 1947.

Patricia Lujack raised two daughters (Mary Jane and Carol) and a son (Jeff). Lujack always responds something like this:

"It was justice that we tied, but I truly think it was the worst game I ever played. I'm glad it's the Blanchard tackle they remember. I made three others—and all were on Arnold Tucker. He was running back three interceptions on my passes."

Lujack is still as humble as when he arrived at Notre Dame with "the suit of clothes I was wearing and a travelers check for $20. I cashed the check, locked $15 in my Gladstone bag, and walked around the campus thinking the $5 in my pocket made me the richest man in the world."

Lujack made his debut as a starter against Army in 1943. The '43 Irish had won six straight when Angelo Bertelli, ND's first Heisman trophy winner, left for the Marines. The waiting Lujack filled Bertelli's shoes. His real shoes, too, because Bert's were available when Lujack's own footwear was missing prior to the Army game. Lujack passed for two touchdowns and ran for one as the Black Knights were subdued, 26-0. The kid who had come from Connellsville, Pa., as a 6 foot, 160-pound 17-year-old, was going to hit it big.

Service on a submarine chaser interrupted.

The 1946 Irish were 8-0-1 under Lujack. Next year they were 9-0-0, nosing out Michigan in the final Associated Press regular season poll for the national championship. Lujack passed for nine touchdowns in 1947 and became Notre Dame's second Heisman winner. As a passer, and a regular only from the seventh game of his sophomore year, Lujack completed 144 of 280 passes for 2,080 yards and 19 touchdowns.

"Those statistics are only part of the story," says a former member of Frank Leahy's coaching staff.

"Remember, Lujack had lots of bench time because Leahy liked others to get experience and we were winning big. Besides, passing was just one weapon in his arsenal. He did everything."

Just about everything, in everything. As a ND soph he earned letters as a football, baseball, and basketball regular, and in track. "He'd run to the dual track meets between innings of a baseball game," says Krause. "Had Lujack pointed for the 1948 Olympics he might have beaten Bob Mathias out of the decathlon crown."

Lujack's final college game saw him direct the East to a 49-9 victory in the San Francisco Shrine game. He intercepted at the goal, he returned punts for 21 and 24 yards, he passed for touchdowns to Bill Swiacki (Columbia) and Bob Sullivan (Holy Cross), ran 8 yards for a touchdown, and set up another with two passes netting 37 yards. You ask the man who did everything what he remembers most and he'll suggest: "Maybe beating Army 27-7 at South Bend in 1947." What did Lujack do in that game that he remembers so vividly? "It's what Terry Brennan did," says Lujack. "Ran the kickoff back 97 yards for a first-minute touchdown."

The flip of the coin that started the Illinois game in 1946 and a nine game march to the national championship.

COULD A SHADOW SHED LIGHT ON THEIR SECRET?

The secret of these good looking Haggar Imperial® fashions is the styling plus fine fabric. It's a comfortable blend of Today's Dacron® from Burlington Menswear® and worsted wool to resist wrinkles and keep you looking good.

The door creaked a cautious welcome as they pushed it open. Their eyes scanned the sparse office, locked on mine, then darted to the darkened hall. Who were they? Why were they here?

Two things I knew for sure. First, they were being followed. And, second, they had real class. Lots of it. Just the cut of their clothes said style and elegance. The fabric said taste.

Questions buzzed in my mind like hornets. But, in this business it's money first. So I told 'em my fee and took a swig of cold coffee. They went for their wallets and suddenly, the pieces fit. I caught a glimpse of a familiar label inside their coats, and knew why they were followed. There ain't a dame around who can pass up the great looks of Haggar Imperial slacks and sport coats.

MARCHING CHIEFS

The Marching Chiefs popularity has been growing in leaps and bounds as its reputation as one of the nation's finest collegiate marching bands continues to grow.

The Pride of Florida State is made up of nearly 300 bandmen including a feature twirler, a corps of majorettes and flag girls. Every school and college in the University is represented in the FSU band.

For over a quarter of a century the Marching Chiefs have been providing Florida State football fans with musical and marching entertainment. Since their beginning back in the early 1950s, the name of the Marching Chiefs has been synonymous with colorful, fast paced shows and music to satisfy even the hard to please listener.

In addition to the Chiefs' performances at home games and several road contests, their past national and regional television appearances has helped to bring the Chiefs into the homes of millions.

As Chiefs step out on the field this year, audiences will be greeted by the familiar version of the style that in the past has entertained millions. Under the third year leadership of Bentley Shellahamer, assistant director of bands and director of the Marching Chiefs, and the continued work of coordinator of bands Carl Bjerregaard, associate director and arranger Charles Carter and graduate assistant Bob Spradling, the Chiefs will be presenting a style of performance which Seminole fans have seen in the past. Music will be coordinated with the various drills and formations, to create a new dimension in sight and sound.

Helping the small Businessman

Economic Development Center aids the Florida Store Owner

by Frank Stephenson, FSU INFORMATION SERVICES

Bike shops, tobacconists, shrimp processors, tree pruners and fix-it shops have one big thing in common in Florida besides a struggle to stay in business. Since March, 1978, they and thousands of other small and not-so-small businesses throughout Florida have been eligible to receive specialized, in-depth advice on how to survive in today's highly competitive, inflation-riddled economy — free advice at that!

The source of such welcome words is the Florida Economic Development Center. For almost two years, the Center has focused the talents of business management specialists at Florida State University on dozens of problems facing small and intermediate-sized businesses and local governments in Florida.

Already, more than 135 businesses, chambers of commerce, and county governments have sought out the Center's advice on how to handle such things as inflation, cash-flow problems, management, advertisement and promotion, site location, loan applications and marketing. In the process, the associate director, Larry Bobo, says the Center has helped create or save more than 4,000 jobs in Florida.

Bobo, a former economic analyst for the State Department of Commerce, serves as the Center's general manager under the direction of Dr. William Shrode, associate dean of Florida State's College of Business. He and Dr. Shrode guide the Center's activities from a downtown Tallahassee headquarters in a newly renovated building, ironically the former home of a small business which fell victim to urban blight, another Center concern.

"We're literally a university storefront for managerial assistance," said Bobo. "People walk right in off the street with their business problems. We listen to them, and quite often we can tell them on the spot whether or not we can help them. If it's a complex problem, we set up an appointment with our specialists and we're off."

BUSINESS COUNSELING FOR FREE — is the business of Larry Bobo and his associates at the Florida Economic Development Center, a part of FSU's College of Business. Directed by Dr. William Shrode, associate dean of business at Florida State, the Center gives free advice and technical assistance to businesses and local governments throughout Florida.

Most of the Center's business comes from referrals through the Small Business Administration and word-of-mouth from satisfied clients. And the business hasn't stopped coming since the Center's doors swung open. For this coming academic year, Dr. Shrode, Bobo and their associates anticipate helping 80 clients per quarter figure out how to get in business or how to stay there.

Small and moderate-sized businesses are the Center's primary clients, although the Center is capable of revamping the managerial habits of large corporations, Bobo said. This past year, Center specialists worked with companies ranging from a Pinellas County seafood processor with annual revenues of $22 million and employing 300, to a retail gift shop with less than 10 employees.

It's the small businesses that especially stand to benefit from the Center because, unlike their mammoth-sized competitors, they usually cannot afford to hire consultants, Bobo said, "At absolutely no charge to them, small business operators can draw from a wide range of business expertise, much of which comes from people who are nationally-known in It's very simple, really. Wayne H. Coloney Company employees don't just work in the community, they get involved.

Sure, we didn't stay little very long, but we haven't outgrown our obligation to Tallahassee. And we don't intend to. In the short span of only nine years, we have twice received the Regional Small Business-Prime Contractor of the Year Award. And, for the last three years, we have been listed as one of the 500 top design firms in the United States by McGraw-Hill's "Engineering News-Record." These honors, we hope, have brought a certain amount of prestige to Tallahassee.

We'll continue our active role in our area's growth because we consider it a privilege to live and work here.

We'll continue to appreciate the natural beauty of our area. The preservation of beautiful, old homes and the protection of our clear water and lush, green forests are part of the Coloney concept of clean, environmentally safe industry.

"We're in up to our ever-lovin' necks."

We'll sponsor such worthwhile organizations as The Coloneys, a semi-professional baseball team, because young people are extremely important to our future.

We'll continue to provide employment opportunities because one goal of the Coloney Company is to be listed in "Fortune 500" in the next decade.

We'll continue to be involved in social, cultural and educational activities because we believe them to be an integral part of community life.

First, however, we believe that a group of dedicated, highly qualified professionals should want to get—and stay—involved in the community.

We are. We do.

their fields," Bobo said. He added that charges are usually made to cover costs of any publications written by Center staff members at clients' requests.

Mainly, the Center uses the services of faculty members from Florida State's College of Business, which helped set up the Center through matching funds provided by the U.S. Department of Commerce's Economic Development Administration. Seven business faculty members are regular consultants for the Center's clients on such topics as marketing, management, and finance. In addition, the Center employs a counseling coordinator, three graduate research assistants, and a secretary.

Quite often, however, clients' needs go beyond mere dollars-and-cents know-how, and they call on the Center for advice on how to write job descriptions, advertise, relocate or choose a business site and how to set personnel guidelines. For such help, Center staffers rely on Florida State's wealth of expertise in such fields as geography, urban and regional planning, communications, psychology and sociology, Bobo says.

The Center has been particularly popular among heads of local governments in more than 30 counties in Florida. Center associates have counseled dozens of county and municipal groups, and have helped them design strategies for economic and community development, write grant applications, plan for industry, and set up guidelines for industrial park development.

Florida State's Center is unique to the state, but is one of 30 centers throughout the U.S. that is university-based and is partly supported by the federal Economic Development Administration. In the southeast, similar centers are headquartered at Auburn University, Georgia Tech, Memphis State University, University of Kentucky, University of Tennessee and West Carolina University. For more information about the Florida Economic Development Center, call Larry Bobo at (904) 644-1044, or write to the Center at 122 S. Monroe Street, Tallahassee, Florida 32301.

Florida State University Alcohol Awareness Program

In the Fall of 1978 the Florida State University Alcohol Awareness Program was established in the Office of the Dean of Students. The goal of the program has been to educate the campus community regarding the responsible use of alcohol in our society. The program coordinator and staff have assembled educational materials and have developed alcohol awareness workshops which attempt to increase the knowledge of the community in regard to alcohol and to focus on decision making skills in hope that individuals will make responsible choices when using alcoholic beverages.

The athletic department supports this program and encourages the Seminole fans to keep in mind the problems associated with alcohol abuse and to make responsible decisions involving the use of alcohol. Remember, drink in moderation, avoid driving after you drink, and enjoy the Seminole winning tradition.
